Sea Turtle Conservation Reigns at Club Regina Cancun

Each year, from May through November, endangered sea turtles instinctively return to Mexico's 6,000 miles of beaches to lay their eggs and continue their species. For guests at Club Regina Cancun, the turtles' arrival offers a rare glimpse at an ancient life ritual, and the chance to play an active role in sea turtle conservation.

Cancun, part of the Yucatan Peninsula which provides many nesting beaches with key nutritive feeding locations, is recognized globally for sea turtle inhabitation and conservation. Club Regina Cancun and other resorts participating in Mexico's Marine Turtle Protection Program are part of one of the globe's most advanced sea turtle protection initiatives. Club Regina Cancun's program has helped the Leatherback, Green, Loggerhead, and even the critically endangered Hawksbill species. Last year, we harvested 172 nests and released over 16 thousand turtles.

This program allows our Members and guests to be witnesses to conservation. They can watch trained Raintree staff recover freshly laid eggs, document the 'clutch', and relocate the eggs to new nests. There the eggs will lay, buried 20 inches down, incubating from 45 to 60 days. Under the staff's protective eye, poachers, birds and other predators are kept away until they hatch. Turtles usually hatch at night and immediately make their way to the ocean to begin their lives, which are believed to be as long as a century old. Unfortunately, though, turtles face many threats related to human activities, and thus Members and guests play an important role by going from witness to ambassador for the sea turtle, spreading awareness on how to respect these great creatures and their environment.

This year our preservation team has faced new challenges. Because of COVID-19, the resort was closed in May, and we did not have enough team members to collect all the clutches at the beginning of the nesting season. Additionally, we did not know if we would be able to include guests in the process this year. Fortunately, our doors reopened in late June and our team took great care in safeguarding the incubation period of the nests we were able to collect.

And now that it's time for releases, our guests' favorite part, we have taken social distancing measures to ensure that our Members can still witness this awe-inspiring sight! So you may notice a few differences this year, but you still have time to come be a part of this amazing phenomenon and spread awareness for these great creatures. We are on track to have turtle releases every day in September and maybe even into October- come join us!

IF YOU COME ACROSS A TURTLE DIGGING A NEST OR LAYING HER EGGS, OR A HATCHLINGS EMERGING FROM THE SAND...

- Do not disturb. Sea turtles in Mexico and in many areas around the world are federally protected species.
- Stay quiet. Whisper, use no flashlights or flash photography, don't smoke, and keep at least 10 meters' distance.
- Don't touch. Mothers may get spooked if touched while laying their eggs. Touching hatchlings can spread harmful germs or sunscreen. Don't help the hatchlings to the sea; it may seem arduous, but they've been doing it for more than 200 million years.
